about us

We are parents to two middle school aged boys adopted from foster care who are siblings. We dated throughout college, a graduate program and were engaged once graduate school was completed. After 15 years of dating, we have now been married for 3 years. We have known since day one we wanted to adopt due to fertility concerns. We are extremely family oriented. Our household is loving and active. Our mother/mother-in-law is part of the household since she was recently widowed. We love our sons from foster care just as much as if we had birthed them ourselves. Family and friends are everything and they come before us. We are compassionate, religious, nurturing and are seeking a girl to complete our family. We have 5 animals in total and consider them family members as well. Our belief is that life throws you curveballs, but it's how you handle them that matters most. Adoption is our way of building a family due to fertility issues and we recognize the sacrifice a birth mother makes in order to make this possible.

Fun Facts

He enjoys playing music on the piano and organ for church, mountain biking, yard work, eating, spending time with family and running.

She loves to go shopping with her mom, do arts and crafts, fish, cook, bake, spending time with family and stay up to date with her discipline in science.

our home

Our house is two stories with 4 bedrooms and a basement. We have a very tidy household. Both of our sons receive allowance based off the work they do. We have a spacious backyard for optimal outdoor activities, a sitting area with a patio and a fire pit for s'more nights. There is a basketball hoop out front and several bird and squirrel feeders for hours of amusement. We enjoy gardening and keeping the outdoor space tidy, while balancing work with fun. We love outdoor games such as basketball, volleyball, baseball, flying airplanes, football, badminton and croquet.

ABOUT jeremy

(written by stacy)

Stacy is a truly devoted mother, wife and daughter. She is the cornerstone and heart of our family. She finds loving and caring ways to constantly improve the lives of the people that surround her. When all else fails, Stacy is relentless and she works from the heart to make sure that the best possible outcomes are achieved.

Jeremy is an exceptionally kind, loving and hard-working person. I could not ask for a more humble spouse who works so hard to afford me the opportunity to be a full-time homemaker to our newly adopted sons. God has truly blessed me with my soulmate and for that I am eternally grateful.

our family

We live in a suburban area within a highly rated school district. We are close to parks, stores and medical facilities. Our neighborhood includes many young and diverse families with children to play with. We are also blessed with older neighbors who can serve as mentors for any child. Our household includes my mother (recently widowed), us, our two adopted sons who are brothers and our 5 animals. All remaining family members live nearby and are actively involved in our lives, especially grandparents. We both have siblings who we see often. Our family traditions include celebrating holidays together, attending church services, and making memories through family activities.

dear birthmother,

First off, we want to thank you for an inevitably hard decision and the ultimate gift you are providing families such as ours. Rest assured, there is enough love and support in our home to provide any child endless love.

We are simple. What you see is what you get. We love hard, we work hard and put others before ourselves when hard times present. There is never a hesitation to help others. As a mom with experience in social services and the medical field there is a reassurance and confidence gained. We are nurturers at heart and adoption just fills that void all the more.

Our occupations include being a chief civil engineer and a homemaker who was a former laboratory scientist. Stacy's past work experiences, prior to being a mom, encompassed impactful leadership positions and several public service roles. These opportunities helped to fulfill her dreams of helping others, but now the most rewarding job is being a full-time mom.

The most important thing to us is family. Occupations are wonderful and we pride ourselves in service-oriented careers. Ultimately though, at the end of the day we leave this world with an impact and nothing material. We want that impact to be one of love, pride that we raised children who will continue our legacies of service and the simplicity of knowing we supported our family and friends throughout life. As spouses, we honor our vows, share a joint belief in God and our love for one another persists through anything.

We would welcome a bi-racial child into our family. Love is love and color is color. We have several bi-racial friends. God makes each of us unique and all life is a gift. Depending on the racial background, we would reach out to friends of similar ethnicities and expose our child to local events where they can learn more about their cultures. There are also many resources to educate not only the child, but ourselves. It would be a meaningful journey to take as a family.

In closing, thank you. Thank you for your inner strength, for choosing our family if we are the right match, trusting us with the life you've created, and the sacrifice it takes on you both mentally and physically. More than anything, thank you for providing your child with a life that you long for them to have knowing that you will be affected by this decision.

Warmest regards,

Why Adoption?

We chose adoption prior to marriage due fertility concerns and the potential risk to the baby. It was an easy decision based on the mitigating factors. We also had a desire to provide a home to children who did not have such an opportunity. We recently adopted 2 sibling brothers of middle school age and would love to adopt a girl in order to complete our family. Our sons had other siblings in foster that included a half-sister. Their previous experience motivates them to welcome a sister into the household. The continuous inquiries as to when this will happen reassures us as parents that this will be a special and much wanted addition to our family.
